

Craft a Plan on a Page

If you have ever written a 50-page plan and tried to get everyone on your side, you know how daunting that can be. Here is the written plan for Joshua and how to use it. Joshua 1:8 says, "This Book of the Law shall not depart from your mouth, but you shall meditate in it day and night, that you may observe to do according to all that is written in it. For then you will make your way prosperous, and then you will have good success." What is the book of the Law? The Torah.

In my recent blog 'Social Media and Your Career' I mentioned that if we didn't have technology, we wouldn't have film. I wanted to reiterate that statement before I go into this topic of whether or not technology has eroded the craft of film storytelling in regards to if spectacle is more important than a solid narrative.

This Monday, I finally made a decision to go on a healthy meal plan after gastronomic indulgences during the winter break. However, how to make a healthy meal troubles me for a while because I'm not good at cooking at all. Then I took out my phone and searched the keyword "salad" on the app store. I was trying to find an app that teaches me to make delicious and healthy salads. Then there are lots of similar salad making apps showed up on my screen. I downloaded the one named "Salad Recipes" which ranks number one on the list. This app teaches me how to make different of salads step by step which is very easy and convenient. Now, I'd like to check this app for materials I need to prepare for the meal and buy them on the way home after class. It really helped me a lot.

Diction may not play a critical part in your story, but it will help you craft unique, memorable characters. Character is defined by action, but choosing to speak is an action that cannot be undone. So when you give dialogue to your characters, pull out the old thesaurus and choose your words carefullyâ€”or wiselyâ€”or discreetlyâ€”or SB10 advances one of the original Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan (CERP) projects—the Everglades Agricultural Area (EAA) Reservoir. A critical part of the solution to a complex water quality problem, the EAA Reservoir will provide needed water storage, treatment and conveyance south of Lake Okeechobee to reduce harmful discharges to the estuaries and send clean water south to the Everglades and Florida Bay. Acquiring the land needed to accelerate the EAA Reservoir project to store and treat water is essential, as the discharge of toxic water from Lake Okeechobee impacts Florida's economy, health and environment.

Part 2 outlined an opportunity to learn, by writing fiction that tells a STORY. I released an open source framework for a story I plan to write with the help of a technique called crowdsourcing. I want to be open and transparent about my belief that this text performs dimensionality reduction, which is a fancy way of saying, "demolition," on a comprehensive reality distortion field that exists. War used to be "the go to method" for demolishing distortion fields, but thanks to the geometrically increasing computing power of the commodity microprocessor, which has been in force for the last few decades, we can now carry out the proposed reduction in the dimensionality of culture by simply mapping and reducing our view of the data set.

In February 2009 President Obama announced to a joint session of Congress his desire to work with them on a plan for healthcare reform. By July, a series of bills were approved by committees within the House of Representatives. This was done with very little input from Republican Congressman, they chose not to participate even though Democrats gave them the opportunity. On the Senate side from June to September, the Senate Finance Committee held a series of 31 meetings to develop a healthcare reform bill. This group in particular, Democrats Max Baucus, Jeff Bingaman and Kent Conrad, along with Republicans Mike Enzi, Chuck Grassley and Olympia Snowe met for more than 60 hours. The principles that they discussed in conjunction with the other committees, became the foundation of the Senate healthcare reform bill.

Consider developing a plan for training, supervision, and support for those who will be responsible for using the form to collect and manage data. Forms that promote consistent and comprehensive data collection provide a necessary foundation?â??but staff training on using the forms is critical to data quality.

I still worry, but I've made myself write. Other than this piece, I haven't written about him? about us. And I don't plan on doing that. It has taken me until now to have an honest conversation with myself about that relationship and why I insist on giving it license over my well-being? over my life. So I'm trying to get back on track. I'm back to writing something daily. I don't care what. I just write. This piece is a prime example of the ramblings I've produced lately. It's not great or even good writing. But I'm writing. For at least 15 minutes a day, I am productive. I put words down that, while they may not be my best work, they're my work. I've missed rereading my words and reliving what I felt when I put them down.

The economic conditions do not need to be rehashed, IMF's recent report on Nigeria showed how unimpressed they are with the proposed Economic Recovery and Growth Plan (ERGP) and actions taken by the government. The IMF says more needs to be done, see here . While some macro economic indicators appear to be taking a turn for the better (inflation dropped from 18.7% in January 2017 to 17.8% in February 2017), the overall position remains unfavorable. The country remains in a recession (four straight quarters of contraction with a fifth likely to be confirmed), unemployment at an all time high and policy decisions remain mind boggling. The lack of urgency is bewildering?â??despite all the noise about improving on last year, the 2017 budget is yet to be passed (yes the 2016 budget runs till May 2017, but still the 2017 budget should have been passed before end of first quarter!). Still, this has not increased confidence in the Nigerian economy and the Naira as investors stay out.

When Dr. King was assassinated in Memphis, he was in the middle of a plan to gather Americans who were struggling to get by for a march on Washington. The Poor People's Campaign would demand good-paying jobs that allowed them to raise their families in healthy and safe communities and quality education that opened opportunities for them to thrive. King's death was followed two months later by the assassination of former Attorney General and U.S. Sen. Robert Kennedy, his fellow traveler who championed for a better life for people struggling to make ends meet. The Center for Community Change was created as the first project of the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Foundation, intended to carry on Kennedy's vision and values.

Before I get to those two options, let's remember a couple of important facts. First, last year Governor Cuomo announced a huge five year $20b affordable housing plan that would build 100,000 units and outlined a longer-term plan for 20,000 supportive housing units. Though light on details – it was through a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) which isn't handled like a normal budget allocation process and serves more as a wish list – it was a major policy shift that scored political points from housing advocates across the state.
