

Find true north

It's true not everyone has enough time to take a walk during office hours, but when working in a field that requires mental work, taking a walk is necessarily to let your mind have some rest. It might also help you to find a solution . You don't need to walk kilometres, just go to the store or have a stroll in the office's yard or inside, for a few minutes and a glimpse of the idea will come.

Everyone living in Lichfield City North is very welcome to contact me online through social media or email (philip.john@somethingnew.org.uk) at any time, and I'll endeavour to respond as quickly as humanly possible. I'm also interested to visit constituents in their homes to talk about any issues, concerns or questions. I'm doing this for local people, not for my party.

LGBTQI kids make up a disproportionate amount of homeless youth in the United States. Recognizing the magnitude of the problem, True Colors Fund , a nonprofit working to end LGBTQI youth homelessness, created an app True Connect targeted at homeless LGBT youth populated with geographic data on nearby, LGBT-friendly places where they can stay, eat, hang out, charge their batteries, and get medical care. The nonprofit decided to take this approach after determining that LGBTQI youth rank cell phone access and the connectivity it provides as a higher priority than finding food. True Colors Fund provides educational and training opportunities to volunteers at the safe spaces, ensuring that advocates know how to care for LGBTQ homeless youth and pass on information about the app to youth in their care. They're also celebrating April 26 with #40toNoneDay , a social-driven campaign to broaden awareness of LGBTQ, so make sure to spread the word!

It began at 3 a.m. on a Wednesday. The rebels seized downtown shopping areas, including the Magnificent Mile. They blocked entrances and exits to high-rise buildings. Simultaneously, they rode in from the North, South, and West, posting vehicles and armed fighters at the ends of each city block in affluent areas. Their orders were to contain the areas and try not to shoot people, but be prepared, just in case.

As we stand by the monument of the Battle-Ground, I see a white pine dimly in the horizon just north of Lee's Hill. That tree seems the emblem of my life; it stands for the west, the wild. The sight of it is as grateful to me as to a bird whose perch it is to be at the end of a weary flight. I am not sure whether the music I hear is most in the robin's song or in its boughs. My wealth should be all in pine-shillings.

With you in my vision, it becomes all too clear just how much I have lost sight of what truly matters, what is truly important. For what could possibly be more important to a writer than the craft itself? My progenitors in the field have described writing as being as important to them as food or water or sunlight, and I would wholeheartedly agree with this comparison. Your appearance forces me to re-access, to find my True North, to tear apart and relay the markers that indicate my true goals and re-examine the steps I need to take in order to achieve them.

As if that wasn't enough I was born to a German father and a Kiwi Mother in the Great White north of Canada. Oh so tolerant Canada. Now you will know that those 2 countries have installed 'Hate Speech laws' specifically "anti-Islamophobia laws" or as I call them in their true form "Anti-Blasphemy laws" as in the case with Canada's recent M-103 motion. Now that's two of my countries of origin and heritage who now have a noose around neck of freedom. I will not let my home of New Zealand regress further into totalitarianism.

Everything that had been true in his life had been abandoned for cliché and simulation. Like the products that line the shelves in brightly colored boxes, today was a throwaway moment whose purpose was to trick you into living for tomorrow when all it truly offers is the empty promise of more of the same.

James felt wetness on his cheek. The rain had come. The fat heavy drops filtered through the leaves and fell with a gentle thud onto the leaves and onto his face. Around him the storm raged, rivulets of water flowed down the hillside carrying the old leaves and exposing the new growth underneath. Above him though the great tree waved its limbs, catching the torrent and slowing it to a gentle drenching of warm southern rain.

Looking out over the forest floor he could still tell the track that General Johnston had followed north from Corinth to meet his fate at Shiloh. The same track that General Grant had followed south only a few days later. James could almost see the columns of grey walking confidently toward the river a few miles away and the endless line of blue that went the other way soon after. He closed his eyes and almost heard the tree whisper his grandfather's tales back to him. This tree had been where James came for clarity and peace for so long that he knew no other way to find it. Here, underneath the sky and the leaves, James could think and decide. This is where James had decided to become a soldier when he was only seventeen. Here is where he had decided to reenlist three years later, the bullet wound in his shoulder still aching. He had made the same decision three years later, a cane leaning beside him because of the shrapnel below his knee.

Technology, has taken a firm stand on the African Soil, and many are taking the lead from the rest of the world. It's a true fact that the Tech community in Nigeria has increased over the years, so many has ventured into one niche or another in Technology, with conferences and meetups holding almost everyday. And this community is not gender specific (no longer a male dominated thing).

Figuring out some technology solutions that unlock the hidden potential of your workforce and enable true productivity, within the set budget is the ultimate goal of nearly every small business. In this blog, you will find some ways cutting-edge technology helps increase the productivity of your business. As the remote staff expands and in-house workforce contracts, businesses these days are working in smaller physical offices. More and more organizations are giving their employees an option to work off site, allowing them to save money needed to maintain a large workforce. This option allows recruitment team to cast a wider net into the talent pool, increasing the probabilities of finding a well-experienced candidate. Productive employees need quick access to business data and using mobile-friendly technology and productivity tools are a sure-fire way to provide that.

I have met true artists and successful people. They are not obsessed by becoming the best at something, they are obsessed, energize, by what they do, by their art, by the doing, not the dreaming. Sure they dream of success, but not like me and you. It's not a disease for them (or sometimes they are just so talented and lucky that they can be narcissic's assholes and successfulâ! But not you, not me).
